Write copy you can stand behind

A practical fact-sheet, prompt and review workbook

What you will learn

Clarify your audience, offer and next step. Ask Claude for a structured draft. Catch unsupported promises. Review the exact words before applying them to a website.

The real demonstration

Clear Desk Support is a fictional training example. Claude initially suggested fuller diaries and nothing gets buried. Neither claim was in the approved fact sheet. A human correction produced a more defensible draft.

Your task

Choose ONE existing page. Save its headline, supporting paragraph and primary button label. Complete this worksheet using information the business owner has approved.

Important boundary

This lesson demonstrates real copy drafting and revision in Claude. It does not build or publish a new website. Copy approval and functional website testing are separate steps.

Start with verified facts

Fill this in before writing your prompt

Business and audience

Name; who this page is for; who it is not for.

Services or product facts

What you actually provide, using plain language.

The next step

Enquiry, booking or another verified action; exact destination.

Unknowns to exclude

Prices, proof, results, qualifications, timeframes, location and delivery details.

Tone and source boundary

Phrases you naturally use; approved source documents; confidential information to leave out.

Ask for a critique first

Copy this pattern and substitute your own approved facts

Prompt pattern

We are drafting a website page. Use only this approved fact sheet: [facts]. The audience is [audience]. The next step is [action]. Tone: [tone]. Unverified details: [unknowns].

Current draft: [paste your draft].

First critique the draft against the fact sheet. Then write one headline, short supporting paragraph, meaningful button label and three short service descriptions. Mark unknowns explicitly. Do not invent guarantees, testimonials, prices, qualifications or measured results. Explain the changes.

Why this structure helps

The task has a source boundary, a clear output and a checkable explanation. A more detailed answer is not automatically a more accurate answer. Read every block yourself.

Privacy check

Use only material you are permitted to share. Do not paste customer passwords, private email threads or unrelated confidential records. Fictional examples are useful for practice.

Your first draft / review notes

What did the assistant get right? Which exact phrase goes beyond your facts?

Catch the hidden promise

Keep the real before-and-after as a teaching example

First answer: investigate these phrases

Fuller diaries implies more bookings. The fact sheet only said appointment coordination. Nothing gets buried is an absolute claim about email handling. Neither was approved.

Targeted correction prompt

Your draft says [exact phrase], which implies [unsupported promise]. The fact sheet only supports [verified task]. Revise that phrase and remove other implied guaranteed outcomes. Keep the tone [tone]. Return the revised blocks and a short change log.

Corrected example

Headline: Practical support for inboxes, appointments and enquiries.

Support: Clear Desk Support helps independent service businesses with inbox organisation, appointment coordination and enquiry follow-up. Tell us what your admin looks like and ask how we might help.

Button: Ask about support.

Check the correction itself

Compare the change log with the final text. Does each statement have a source? Is anything still absolute? Do not treat the assistant's explanation as proof that every correction was applied.

Map words to page blocks

Apply approved copy to your own separate website draft

Headline and support

Use the main heading block for the headline, then a separate paragraph for the explanation. Keep the visitor's audience, offer and next step easy to find.

Button and services

Put the meaningful label on the primary button. Write its intended destination beside it. Use separate service headings and short descriptions. Do not paste critique or change-log notes onto the public page.

Elementor practice

Our WordPress lessons use Elementor. Apply your words to a separate training draft. Review desktop and phone sizes, wrapping and contrast. Test the real button destination in visitor view before calling it finished.

Read the whole page

Review from header to footer. Look for old contact details, contradictory claims and placeholder testimonials. If you create additional pages, inspect each one completely.

Functional checks still needed

Copy approval does not establish form delivery. Test the actual enquiry workflow separately. Record any tests you have not performed.

Approve, practise, improve

Final checklist and a useful question for the next lesson

Clarity

Can an unfamiliar reader identify the audience, offer and next step?

Accuracy

Does every claim match an approved fact? Are unknowns excluded?

Page review

Have you checked desktop, phone, full-page consistency and button destination?

Ownership

Has the business owner approved the exact final wording? Save both versions and the reason for each change.

Your next step

Repeat the process for ONE page. Keep a dated revision note. Use real enquiries and audience feedback to guide future changes; do not promise ranking or sales results.
